In case you missed this, FOX News has an article worth reading regarding the so-called 'Fairness Doctrine' noting that Conservative talk dominates radio. But it doesn't monopolize it.

And as a handful of Democrats promote the return of the so-called Fairness Doctrine, liberals and conservatives alike are dismissing the effort, saying the policy is outdated and wouldn't change the fact that the audience is responsible for the success of hosts like Rush Limbaugh.

The Fairness Doctrine is a policy created decades ago but abolished in the late 1980s that required broadcasters to provide opposing views on controversial issues.

Democrats like Iowa Sen. Tom Harkin and Michigan Sen. Debbie Stabenow kicked up debate in recent weeks by calling for a return to those standards. New York Democratic Rep. Maurice Hinchey said Friday he wants the doctrine back, though a spokesman told FOXNews.com on Thursday that the congressman would not include language for that in a bill he's reintroducing to impose broadcast ownership limits.
