...is the way Lynn Woolley describes the so-called 'Fairness Doctrine' in his op-ed today in Human Events. Woolley writes

"Fairness isn't going to hurt anybody. I just can't imagine these people who want to fight against fairness," said Congresswoman Slaughter to Bill Moyers back in 2004. But this is "media fairness" in the same way that Obama promises to spread "economic justice." Obama's long-used term is code for "spread the wealth" just as the "Fairness Doctrine" is an Orwellian name for shutting up the opposition.

Seeing this coming, Congressman Mike Pence introduced "The Broadcaster Freedom Act" in 2007 that would prevent government tampering with free speech on the air. At that time, all Republicans signed on to sponsor the bill. A lone Democrat, Rep. John Yarmuth of Kentucky, cosponsored it. That speaks volumes about how Democrats feel about censorship.
