Amidst a flurry of late session activity that included a number of late nights and even a Saturday session, the House of Representatives finished the work of the 108th Congress...for now.

Among our accomplishments just this weekend included passage of the American Jobs Creation Act, the 9-11 Recommendations Implementation Act as well as bills providing funding for the Defense and Homeland Security Departments. Of course, as sometimes happens in election years, we may end up coming back after the election for a "lame duck" session to vote on the conference report on the 9-11 bill.
