Today I flew home to Indiana to cast my vote in the May Primary election in person at the Clifford Fire Station in Columbus. Lots of friends told me I should just vote by absentee ballot but, for me, that would be like phoning in Christmas. I so enjoy standing outside my home precinct and chatting with my neighbors. I found out that the field behind my house is getting soybeans this year and I got an early sense that a close friend would score a big win in the governors race. I hope I can always be home on election day. There's nothin like the view you get from the Clifford Fire Station!

Read more about the primary results in this story from the Muncie Star Press